1. Land Acknowledgement

The land on which we meet has been here from time immemorial. People have inhabited southern Ontario for about 10,000 years and we acknowledge the Neutral people also called Attawandaron, Anishinaabe, and Haudenosaunee Peoples who lived here when settlers arrived and who share this land with us. May we together learn to care for and respect each other, our flora and fauna, and the land we inhabit together.

She provided an overview of various avenues to explore, including tying heritage properties into the Farm to Fork series; improving cycling and active transportation routes throughout the Township, possibly in collaboration with border municipalities; promoting the Ghost Community project via ExploreWR;

self-guided tours with heritage highlights along the routes; and the Township's upcoming Community Improvement Plan (CIP)

The Committee discussed ways to attract and retain visitors, including incorporating a heritage tour into the Doors Open and Taste of the Countryside events in September and promoting the Ghost Community project in October. Further discussion will occur at a later date.

Carnegie Elmira Library

- granted: $7000

Architect W.A. Mahoney - created plans submitted September 1912

On December 26, 1913 - completion

In April 1886, several Elmira men gathered to discuss forming an organization that would help bring education to the area. This group of men consisted of a newspaperman, a watchmaker, grocer, a hardware man, farmers, a wagonmaker and a furniture dealer. They brought their resources together - which consisted of $36 and eight books. This was the beginning of the Germania Society, which would someday become the Elmira Public Library.

On January 24, 1888, townspeople met to establish a Mechanic's Institute. Such institutes were forerunners of public libraries in Ontario. This institute was a success and changed its name in 1895 to Elmira Public Library. In 1905, the village assumed responsibility for the library and took it under its realm. In 1888, the collection was transferred to the Mechanics' Institution.

In 1910, the library had outgrown the reading rooms so the Board of Directors decided to reach out to the Carnegie Foundation for a grant to build a permanent library. It's important to note that at this time the village's population was 1,060 residents. A.J. Kimmel donated the site and the Elmira Council agreed to maintain the prospective building, whereupon the Carnegie Corporation donated $7,000 for the design and construction. The grant was received on March 18, 1911. Elmira's library is one of 125 Carnegie libraries in Canada.

Architect W.A. Mahoney drew up plans for the library building in September 1912. Carnegie's criteria for the plan included a simple one-floor construction with a basement. There was a "romanesque arch and semicircular transom over the main entrance, with a small classically-styled portico...[with] a triangular pediment with dentils and Ionic columns" (Thompson, 1985).

In just over a year, the library building was constructed and ready to be occupied by December 26, 1913. Not quite two years later, on May 6, 1915, a fire seriously damaged part of the building and its contents. The repairs to the library cost $2,300.

The library board and the Elmira Lions Club collaborated in 1963-64 to renovate and furnish the basement of the building as a children's department. Three years later, the library became a branch of the Waterloo County Library, and in 1973, it became part of the Waterloo Regional Library.

A longstanding goal was reached in 1976 when plans were drawn and funding obtained for an expansion of the library. The curved windows of the addition resemble the arched entrance of the original library. The addition left the original building as a complete entity, but tied the addition to the original building's design and construction. While construction commenced, a bookmobile lent by Kitchener Public Library housed about 5,000 books; it was parked behind Vince's Food Market. The expanded library building opened on April 19, 1978.
